

Changing of the Guard for Wildlife

Marlin Perkins, Rachel Carson, Jane Goodall, Steve Irwin, Jack Hanna, Russ Mittermeier, Jeff Corwin, Jacques Cousteau.

The famous environmentalists listed above, among others, are aging or deceased. They have been the public educators and influencers - the conservationists who have taught a generation to care. 70% of today's conservationists will be gone in 20 years due to retirement and death. Who is going to take their place?

Despite their best efforts, they are leaving the natural world worse off than before.

The next new generation may be the last one that can conserve nature enough to avoid the tipping points that loom for climate change, ocean depletions and mass species extinction. Who are going to be their leaders? Who are the up-and-comers? Among the young who are going to inspire and motivate the public to protect their natural resources? Shouldn't we vigorously support them and nurture their careers in conservation?

A-Team For Wildlife was created in part to motivate the next generation of conservationists and to identify the next leaders and nurture their careers. Membership is open to ALL children, (for a nominal annual fee that covers membership services) and is inspired by our youth leaders. We need your help. Join in partnership with us to educate the next generation about conservation and to support its young leaders.

We proudly present The International A-Team! This growing group of young super-stars in conservation from around the world have done amazing things in conservation. Read their profiles. Invite them to speak at your events. Let them inspire you!

Collectively our 17 International A-Team Members have already raised nearly 1 Million Dollars for conservation, saved over 80,000 acres of habitat, appeared in films, have been interviewed on national TV, won numerous awards, spoken at TED Talks, received over 40 MILLION views on YouTube, spoken to the United Nations, and have received recognition from President Obama.
